Our processing of your personal data

We collect information about you and possibly the injured party to the extent necessary to purchase and manage insurance products and other related services as well as claims processing. This may include information such as names, addresses, social security number ("CPR-number") and e-mail address, insurance information, payment information or information related to damages.

In addition to the information you provide yourself, we collect information, for example, from the Central Person Register (for the purpose of updating address information) as well as from other publicly available sources and registers. We may obtain information from organizations, associations, etc., whose membership of the organization, association, etc. is a prerequisite for you to buy or keep your insurance with us. We may also obtain information from others if you have given your consent or based on the law.

We store and use your personal data for administration, providing you advice about insurance products and for marketing purposes. We may also use the information for surveys and analysis in order to improve our products, consultancy and technical solutions. We often combine personal data from one service with information from other parts of the group – for example in order to provide you with the most relevant offers.

Whenever possible, we have tried to strike a balance between being fully transparent and detailed while still keeping information concise and understandable, when describing what information we collect, but some of our services and apps also use technologies such as cookies, pixel tags and device fingerprinting to handle sessions and perform web audience measurements, so we can improve our electronic services based on how you use them and in some cases integrate them with social media.

Among other things, we use Google Analytics to help us analyze traffic to our services. When used with our advertising services, e.g. those that use the Google DoubleClick cookie, information from us as well as from Google will be linked to information about visits to multiple websites using Google technology.

- The right to move your personal data ("data portability").

All the above rights are handled manually by contacting us. When contacting us, remember to provide the customer number and insurance policy number.

We may reject requests that are unreasonably repetitive, require excessive technical intervention (such as developing a new system or substantially changing an existing process), affecting the protection of others' personal information, or anything that would be extremely impractical.

If we can correct information, we do this for free, except if it requires a disproportionate amount of effort. We strive to maintain our services in a way that protect information from accidental or harmful destruction. Therefore, when we delete your personal information from our services, we may not always be able to delete associated copies from our archive servers immediately, and the information may not be removed from our backup systems prior to expiration of the retention period.

You have the right to appeal to the Danish supervisory authority at any time ("Datatilsynet") (<https://www.datatilsynet.dk/borger/klage-til-datatilsynet/>)
